The terrier family is to-day the most popular of all dogs and it is not in the least surprising that this should be so, for whatever its particular variety may be the terrier is a dog which must appeal forcibly to men and women of all ages. If an active dog is required to follow a vehicle or bleycle or to go on a long hike into the country there are the fox terrier, the Irish terrier, the Airedale and the Welsh terrier to draw

Airedale and the Welsh terrier to draw upon, and all these varieties unless they have become enervated by luxury and pampering are to be relied upon for a day's sport with vermin.

The Scottish terrier, the Dandle Dinmont, Sealyham and the Skye, being all so short upon the leg, can scarcely be regarded as fitting companions for the equestrian or cyclist, but they are dead game, as hard as nails and altogether excellent for the society of people who walk. The bull terrier is the inwho walk. The bull terrier is the in-carnation of canine courage and the Bedlington also is a wonderfully plucky Bedlington also is a wonderfully plucky dog, but both varieties as a rule, though there are of course exceptions, are rather too hot tempered and impulsive to be regarded as quite reliable breeds to be granted their freedom.

Lastly comes the black and tan terrier, a little delicate in constitution may be when compared with some of the others, but well worth the attention and support of those who love a handsome
